With the recent invasions of Spotted Lanternflies and the Emerald Ash Borer in our area over the past few years, many people have become truly aware of the issue with invasive species. However, invasive species are not just an issue for the United States. With global trade occurring in both directions, species from the US are invading other parts of the world. Join Tom Sheppard, Chief Park Naturalist, as he exposes you to this issue and discusses how US species, including some of our local species, are becoming worldwide species.
